Again, we are really sorry to do this but PurposeGames uses ads. This is not an ad per-sey, it is part of the webpage. No blocker can remove this. I think we are at cross purposes here. With Firefox 91 I saw commercial Ad's on the site in question, they were displayed as mentioned on the right hand side of the page under 'Your Skills & Rank'. When I played quizzes there were no issues or message 'Hello! We are really sorry to do this but PurposeGames uses ads....' it is no longer possible to complete quizzes. I have not changed any settings in Firefox; there is clearly something in the upgrade from version 91 to version 92 that is stopping the normal Ads being displayed. This in turn leads to the error message 'Hello! We are really sorry to do this but PurposeGames uses ads...' Obviously the error message is part of the webpage and it is not in itself an Ad, I am not trying to remove this. I have the same issue with Firefox 92 on my wife's laptop, my old laptop and my tablet, with each I get the site; I don't run an Ad Blocker but there is something within Firefox 92 which differs from Firfox 91 which causes ordinary commercial Ad's to be blocked. This seems to be about a new feature in Firefox called smartblock that replaces some tracking scripts with a limited local version. If I disable this smartblock feature via the about: config page then the ads appear and the website works. It would be nice if you could disable this feature on websites that aren't working properly with it enabled. See also: scripts with a limited local version.
